

2.1

“She stumped home to the skybridges, looking down at busy canals. . . . Every day now she found irregular high lines of her own devise. The original High Line was underwater and in its third life as an oyster bed. The current array of skybridges ranged from boardwalks just above high tide to long catwalks at the fortieth and fiftieth floors. They were almost all clear plastic tubes, reinforced by graphenated composite meshes so light and strong that they could san four or five blocks. . . .”

—Charlotte, pp. 49, NY2140

2.2

Temporality of Speculation: Archives of Not-Yet-History